Quack! Quack!: These Baby Animals Can't Want To Meet You (Baby Touch And Feel)

The creators of "Mommy and Me" share their legendary wisdom about child-rearing with hundreds of activities--including games, recipes, and craft projects--designed to help mothers educate and bond with their children.

Illustrations of baby animals include textured fabrics so that children can touch and feel a duckling's feathers, a puppy's ear, a piglet's nose, a bunny's tail, a lamb's fleece, and a cat's fur. On board pages.

Five lavishly illustrated spreads, big, recessed flaps, and a host of animals to spot, name, and mimic combine in these delightful little board books for the very young. You have to think logically to become mad. Whoever looks for unambiguous truth or meaning gets into trouble and psychological turmoil. The evolution of logical thinking, as well as chaotic thinking, is determined by social interaction and communication rules. If one tries to communicate unambiguously, one generates ambiguity; if one tries to control the meaning of behavior, one generates madness. Like many human attributes, most so-called psychotic symptoms can be seen not as deficits, but as resources to keep alive a specific kind of communication and relationship. Integrating the current approaches of communication theory, chaos theory, and the theory of observing systems, Fritz B. Simon provides a new model, examining the self-organization and function of personal realities that we may call delusions and the delusions that we may call reality. This constructionist view of subjectivities, including madness, dissolves the either/or distinction between the highly ideological positions that either the family or the patient, either the biological or the psychic process, is guilty of producing psychosis. It also blurs the either/or distinction between so-called psychotic and normal existences. This book is an entertaining, informative, surprising, and humorous introduction to the newer approaches of systems thinking. It shows in a very logical way that logical thinking may be bad for your mental health.

Crack open this tale of family and fright, as cute as it is creepy. All the animals in the zoo have friends and family to play with and love. All of them, that is, except Quackenstein. Lonely and bitter in his ramshackle corner, he decides to adopt an egg. He cares for it diligently, waiting until the moment when it will hatch a baby duck of his own. On a dark and stormy night, the egg hatches, Quackenstein cackles, and lightning strikes, but wait—what's this? That baby's not a duck! What will he do? Where can he hide? And will Quackenstein ever find someone (or something) to cuddle? Sudipta Bardhan-Quallen's clever rhyming text is perfectly paired with cute and spooky art from Brian T. Jones. "Jones gleefully uses every cliché in the book, from lurid lettering and backgrounds to effective use of silhouettes and shadows. Bardhan-Quallen, too, takes advantage of horror-movie tropes, but she also mixes in some instruction in the form of cumulative nouns for animals. The surprise twist at the end happily resolves Quack's fatherless state." -Kirkus Reviews

Quack Quack! Moo! Children are endlessly fascinated by the noises that animals make, and with My Carry-Along Sound Book Perfect Pets, they can play those sounds all day long! This title features photographs of adorable baby animals, with fun rhymes for adults and children to read out loud together. The key selling point, however, is the integral four button sound bar - children can look at the pictures, listen to the rhymes, then press the buttons to hear the noise that each animal makes. This title is die-cut to shape, with a fun carry handle. Which noisy animal is your favorite? Looks at the sounds made by such familiar animals as hens, chicks, lambs, goats, dogs, cats, horses, cows, and ducks

All of the barnyard animals are excited about the arrival of a new duckling, until the noisy little one refuses to go to sleep.

Highlights baby books, preschool and picture books, poetry and anthologies, early readers, fiction, special needs, award winners, and titles appropriate for toddlers. A section on how to use the internet to look for children's books is also included.

'Quack, Quack ' presents different animals and explores the various noises that they make. This series introduces first words in a playful way by pairing them with fun sounds that young children will recognise.

An assortment of animals gathers for a picnic. Lamb says 'maa,' doggie says 'woof,' crow says 'caw caw' - and baby laughs with joy. The shiny embossed and laminated pictures of animals seem to stand up from the page, inviting babies to reach out and touch. As they become more familiar with the book, children will enjoy imitating the sounds each friendly creature makes.

Now in board book format. Five babies spend the day at a baby animal farm.

Text and illustrations present information about the physical characteristics, behavior, and development of baby animals, from tiny mice and dozy hamsters to frolicking fawns and purring pumas.
